Project Title

Eco-Anthropology of Mediterranean Mountains' Pastoral Commons for global sustainability

Project Description

- To research about the collective management and decision-making processes in different pastoral commons of Mediterranean mountains, along with their dynamics and their potential developments.
- To analyze their impacts in terms of (not including all but among others) biodiversity, climate change mitigation, ecosystem services, food production, economic potential, legal aspects and cultural heritage.
- To develop a future collective comparative research proposal at the full Mediterranean scale.

Keywords

eco-anthropology, commons, pastoralism

Description of the Host Research Lab

The research lab Éco-anthropologie studies the dynamics of cultural and biological changes occurring in their natural and social environments. It explores the extraordinary biological and cultural diversity of our own species, as well as that of non-human primates, with a focus on biodiversity perceptions and practices, using multi- and interdisciplinary approaches.
